

The Fifth Wave

We are in what I call and what some others call "The fifth wave" (TFW). We are now in the final wave. Once mankind advanced far enough to free up time that was otherwise spent on life sustaining duties, a new advancement emerged. It is logical that once we are able to have these life sustaining duties completed for us that we would move on to a higher conscious. The brain is evolutionizing to a higher state.

"What's next," the brain asks? "There must be something more"? Just as our fore-bearers asked themselves 500 years ago when the printing press was borne.

There was a collective conscious back then asking "How can we communicate to each other on a grander scale?" As the railroads where being built in the mid 1800's they asked "How can we get together as a society quicker?" As electricity became commonplace in the early 1900's we asked "How can we make our lives simpler?" As computers and the internet are reaching the critical masses we see the same thing happening that happened with every other 500 year and 80 year society propelling invention cycle; More time is being freed up to reach the final wave.

The final wave is the search for a higher self. The search for true inner peace. The move to spirituality.

In the early stages, the infancy, of the fifth wave, we must see, as a society that materialism is not the answer. We have finally, truly, freed up time. We have succeeded in something that people have been asking-for since the late 1400s to early 1500s; more time. However, we are choosing to spend that time collecting material things and working for material things and material experiences. We think that these things will fill the black hole that resides in 99% of the population. It is only logical that we would try this first. It is a natural state of evolution that we should stop here, and think that this is the answer. We can only get to a higher state of being through first experiencing and understanding that materialism is not the answer.

The ruins we lay across the landscape of time as we evolutionise are many children and people with deep emotional problems. In my opinion, many of these children and people where born ahead of there time. Many of them are the true underlying leaders in the movement to a higher conscious, constantly reminding the other 99% that there must be something more...

When a parent is working long hours to achieve the materialism of his neighbor and to be "Accepted" by society as a whole, that's one thing. However when both parents are trying to achieve this materialism, there can only be one conclusion; Millions of lost and unstable emotional humans walking the planet not knowing there left from there right. Then blaming every other human's they come to meet in life as the culprit. When the culprit is the only people that they psychologically cannot blame; their parents.

People did not have time for emotions in society until the last couple of hundred years. The only exception would be the height of the Roman Empire, when advancements reached by the masses did allow for deeper thinking and feeling. This being squashed by the "Fall".

It made perfect sense to me that we are exactly were we are as a society. Killing, rape, robbery, brutality, drug use, et al.

Mankind cannot cope with the "Freed-up-time". There are no leaders yet who can teach unconditional love. We haven't come to that yet, and it is what we need. Every parent having time for their children and compassion for their children every day every month every year.

Until we achieve this, there can only be one answer.....emotional chaos.

Thank you,
Jim
